History

Before Europeans arrived in New England, the region now known as Connecticut was settled by the Mattabesic or Wappinger Confederacy, the Pequot-Mohegan group, the Sequin, comprising numerous tribes along the Connecticut River, and the Nipmuck. The tribes had a strong network of settlements and trails that crisscrossed the region. Many of the trails paralleled major waterways such as the Connecticut, Thames, and Housatonic Rivers.

Dutch traders established a post on the Connecticut River at Hartford in 1633. A few months later, in response to the Dutch settlement, the English trader William Holmes established an outpost just north of the Dutch, near the junction of the Connecticut and Farmington Rivers. This outpost was Windsor. It became a permanent settlement with the arrival of a group from Dorchester, Massachusetts in 1635.

The next English settlement was Wethersfield in 1634, founded by John Oldham and others from Watertown, Massachusetts. This pattern of groups of settlers from specific Massachusetts towns moving “en mass” to new land in Connecticut would be repeated many times over the next sixty years. Oldham and his followers were warmly welcomed by the Wangunk who were desirous of trading in beaver pelts.

The Colony of Saybrook was founded in 1635 by John Winthrop, Jr. and Lyon Gardiner.

In 1636, Thomas Hooker led a group overland from Cambridge, Massachusetts to Hartford. Hooker and his followers felt that linking town voting rights to church membership was too strict a requirement for town government. On the other hand, the 1637 settlers of the New Haven Colony, Davenport and Eaton thought that the Puritan religious requirements were not strict enough. While both Hooker and his followers and Davenport’s group sought to “purify” the Anglican church, stripping it of ritual and returning it to Biblical simplicity, Davenport and his followers took a hardline approach and limited church membership and participation in the government of the new colony.

Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield merged in 1637 to form Connecticut River Colony. The new Colony adopted in 1639 what amounted to a constitution known as Fundamental Orders. In 1644, the Connecticut River Colony merged with Saybrook Colony. And In 1662, John Winthrop Jr. went to England and received a charter for the Colony of Connecticut which allowed the absorption of the Colony of New Haven.

The fraught relations between the indigenous tribes and the Europeans led to two major wars in the 17th century: the Pequot War, which essentially wiped out the Pequot tribe, and King Philip's War.

By 1700, 39 towns had been established in Connecticut:

1633	Windsor	1649	Stonington	1685	Danbury
1634	Wethersfield	1651	Derby	1686	Mansfield
1635	Saybrook	1651	Middletown	1686	Preston
1635	Hartford	1651	Norwalk	1686	Windham
1637	New Haven	1659	Norwich	1686	Woodstock
1639	Branford	1662	Haddam	1689	Plainfield
1639	Fairfield	1665	Lyme	1690	Canterbury
1639	Guilford	1667	Killingworth	1693	Glastonbury
1639	Milford	1670	Simsbury	1697	Lebanon
1639	Stratford	1670	Wallingford	1699	Colchester
1640	Farmington	1673	Woodbury	1699	Durham
1640	Greenwich	1674	Suffield
1641	Stamford	1674	Waterbury
1646	New London	1683	Enfield

Published Resources for Research

There are several published resources for researching 17th-century Connecticut ancestors: finding aids, study projects, compilations of records and genealogies, family name genealogies, local histories, journals, and periodicals. See below Bibliography > Published Resources for resources within each category.

Records

Early records for Connecticut fall into several categories: Vital, Church and Cemetery, Land, Probate, Town and Colony, and Military. See below under Bibliography for resources mentioned during the lecture and others.

Much of the early record keeping was at the town-level, so learning about the history and record keeping of a town is essential. The new, 6th edition of the Genealogist's Handbook to New England Research (see below) is a great starting place. Also check out the Town Guides at AmericanAncestors.org <https://americanancestors.org/tools/town-guides>. And search the FamilySearch Research Wikis https://www.familysearch.org/wiki/en/Main\_Page for your ancestor's town to find comprehensive and invaluable information about early records in the town.

Towns were responsible for keeping vital records and land records. The Barbour Collection provides transcripts of the early vital records. The Connecticut State Library, in partnership with FamilySearch.org, has been gradually digitizing the original records and making them available on FamilySearch.org. Early probate records appeared in colony court records before the responsibility for probate was transferred to the probate district.

Strategies

Once 17th-century published resources and record sets have been exhausted, family research turns to strategies. Typical problems include distinguishing between people of the same name in the same community, finding a woman's maiden name, determining parentage when multiple marriages are involved and ascertaining the origins of Connecticut settlers.

Cluster research or FAN Club research (researching family, friends, associates, and neighbors) is THE essential strategy for 17th-century research. Our ancestors did not live in a vacuum. Their associates and neighbors may have left clues about our ancestor.

The second critical strategy for 17th-century research is the timeline, based on multiple records. What happened when and where? Use probate, land, court, military, and town records to construct the timeline.

Create a list of potential hypotheses about your research question. Systematically research each hypothesis before discarding.
