Introduction

General

Of all the many and varied sources held in the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) which are useful to the genealogist, the most important must surely be church records, particularly the registers of baptisms, marriages and burials. These were kept by most of the main religious denominations in Ireland and, as this Guide indicates, many of those for the nine counties of Ulster and indeed elsewhere in Ireland have been copied by PRONI or, in some cases, are deposited in PRONI. Civil registration of births and deaths and of Roman Catholic marriages began in 1864 in Ireland, though Protestant marriages were registered from 1845. Church records are therefore of particular importance before these dates, and so most of the copying undertaken by PRONI has concentrated on the pre-civil registration period. The local historian will also find church records a useful source to consult since churches played an important part in the life of the community, particularly in education and welfare, much of which is documented in the minute books of the churches.

Identifying churches in an area

A major problem in using church records is identifying which records exist in a particular area and for what dates. The most obvious way of conducting a search is on a civil parish basis as every townland in Ireland belongs to a civil parish. In origin, the parish is an ecclesiastical administrative unit which then also became the territorial division for civil or government purposes. The townlands, and the parishes they belong to, can be traced through the topographical indexes, which are available in PRONI, in many libraries and on the PRONI website. Both the Church of Ireland and Roman Catholic parishes have well defined boundaries. In general, the Church of Ireland parish and the civil parish are the same and bear the same name, but throughout the 18th and 19th centuries new Church of Ireland parishes were carved out of existing parishes or parishes united to form a new parish and hence the variation between the present civil and Church of Ireland parishes. Roman Catholic parishes less often correspond with a civil parish and frequently are called by different names. They are usually more difficult to define and the composition of many has changed over the years.

Presbyterian, Methodist, and other denominations, do not have a parish structure at all and so in producing this Guide the site of the church building has largely determined which parish it is placed in. Some denominations do have their own defined church areas such as the circuits of the Methodist Church. In some cases a Methodist circuit has only one chapel in it but more usually contains a number of chapels which have moved from one circuit to another over the years. Circuits also straddle several civil parishes. It is therefore very difficult to attach a Methodist circuit to a particular civil parish. This Guide attempts to locate each church within a civil parish, but it has to be said that such locations, particularly for Roman Catholic and Methodist churches, present difficulties both for the reasons just highlighted and because of conflicting evidence in the sources researched.

Scope and arrangement of the Guide

Some years ago PRONI produced a 'Sectional List' of church records of all denominations based largely on the civil parish and including, for each church, details of the types of records and their covering dates, and whether they had been copied by PRONI, the PRONI reference code where appropriate and which records not copied were in the custody of the church. So much copying has been done since the list was produced that it has become very much out of date. This completely revised version includes everything copied or deposited up to 2009. It includes the same type of information but has attempted to locate more accurately churches within each civil parish and to check that all dates are as accurate as it is possible to make them. This has involved extensive research, including an examination of Ordnance Survey maps to locate the sites of churches, and the checking of the content of many films and copies.

The Guide is organised alphabetically by civil parish and within each civil parish the churches are arranged alphabetically by denomination (see Appendix 1 for a list of abbreviations for denominations) which are in turn arranged alphabetically. Where the name of the church is different from the civil parish, a cross-reference is given to the civil parish where the church is located. Certain churches in the Irish Republic have simply been listed under the name of the town or the church rather than the civil parish (see Appendix 2 for a list of these). No attempt has been made to locate churches in Belfast within a civil parish since most of Belfast fell within one parish and in a built-up area a parish is less meaningful – these have been listed under 'Belfast' and no cross-references have been made to these churches.

The records of any particular church will not always be found under the same PRONI reference code. Where there is more than one reference code it sometimes signifies that the records exist simply in different forms (for example, on microfilm and in xerox form). You are advised to check all the reference numbers given in order to locate the records in each entry. The detailed lists on the shelves in PRONI's Search Room and Self Service Microfilm Room or on the eCatalogue should be consulted to obtain the exact details of what is under each reference code. A list of the reference codes used in the Guide and what they stand for can be found in Appendix 3. There are some church records, in original and copy form, scattered among the records from private individuals and institutions (under 'D' and 'T' PRONI references) and these will be indicated in the Guide.

Digitised Church Records

PRONI no longer makes microfilm copies of records deposited with us on a temporary basis by churches. In line with other archival institutions, PRONI now digitises these records. The digitisation is undertaken in-house by PRONI's experienced reprographics technicians. Digitised records from 15 churches are now available to view onsite in PRONI. A list of these records is available to consult in the PRONI Search Room and on the PRONI website. This list will be updated as further church records are digitised and added to the PRONI catalogue. Where PRONI holds a digitised copy of a church, this is clearly identified in reference number against the entry for the relevant church in the Guide.

Baptism, marriage and burial registers

The amount of detail one can extract from registers varies enormously even though many registers are in a printed format which encouraged consistent record-keeping. The most comprehensive baptism register would indicate besides the name of the child, the date of baptism and of birth, as well as the name of the father, the maiden name of the mother and the townland where they lived. Sometimes the occupation of the father is also given. Less detailed entries will give only the date of the baptism and the name of the father.

From 1845, church marriage registers are the same as the civil registers, and always contain the date of the marriage, the names of the two parties, their age (often just whether they are over the age of majority), the names of the fathers of each party and their respective occupations, and the townland where each party resided. Pre-1845 marriage entries are as varied in content as the baptism entries. In addition to the names of the parties and the date of marriage, the townland where each resided is often given but rarely the names of the fathers.

Burial registers are more standardised, usually indicating not only the name and the date of burial (or sometimes that of death) but also address and age.

Finally, it should be said that churches did not generally maintain contemporary indexes to their baptism, marriage and burial registers, although some do exist (for example, St Anne's Cathedral, Belfast). Some indexes have been prepared by family history societies or by the Society of Genealogists in London. More recently the Irish Genealogy Project centres throughout the island of Ireland have been actively engaged in indexing church records ( the centres in Northern Ireland are in Derry where Derry Genealogy Centre covers churches in Co. Londonderry, in Armagh where Armagh Ancestry covers churches in Co. Armagh, in Coalisland where Irish World Family History Services covers churches in Cos Fermanagh and Tyrone, and in Belfast where the Ulster Historical Foundation covers churches in Cos Antrim and Down, including Belfast). These centres now have the indexes on-line and operate a pay per view system to view the entire record. The limited number of indexes available in PRONI are free - a list of these can be found in Appendix 4.

Church of Ireland Records

Until 1871 the Church of Ireland was the state church in Ireland. Following disestablishment, the Parochial Records (Ireland) Act, 1875, declared baptism and burial registers prior to 1871 and marriage registers prior to 1845 to be public records which should be deposited in the then Public Record Office of Ireland in Dublin. However, the opposition of the parishes resulted in a further Act of Parliament in 1876 which permitted these records to remain in local custody provided there was adequate provision for their safe-keeping. Nevertheless, by 1922 the records of 1,006 parishes in Ireland had been deposited in the Public Record Office leaving the records of only 637 parishes in local custody. Although the intention of the 1875 Act was to preserve the parish records, it was nullified by the destruction of the Public Record Office in 1922 when the records of all but four parishes were burnt. Such widespread destruction has left a huge gap in the archival heritage of Northern Ireland and of the Irish Republic, making it difficult not only to trace families who belonged to the Church of Ireland but also those of other denominations because, in the 17th and 18th centuries, the Church of Ireland registers often contain baptisms, marriages and burials of Protestant dissenters and Roman Catholics who were baptised, married or buried within the state church. This practice arose from conditions in Ireland where the Penal Laws against Dissenters, among other things, gave to the Church of Ireland an exclusive right to administer baptism, marriage and burial ceremonies.

Although the destruction of the Church of Ireland registers was catastrophic, it must not be exaggerated. For example, 65 parishes in Northern Ireland have records going back to 1800. A complete list of all parish registers which were held in the Public Record Office in Dublin can be found in the 28th Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Records in Ireland, 1896, which lists all the parishes in alphabetical order, identifies those parishes whose records were sent to the Public Record Office and those which retained them locally. It also indicates for each parish the covering dates of all registers of baptisms, marriages and burials. This source has been used to check if the records of a particular Church of Ireland parish were destroyed and the information has been noted in the Guide.

The Parochial Records (Ireland) Act, 1875 excluded from its provisions other Church of Ireland records which may be earlier in date than the public records: for example, vestry minute books, which sometimes contain baptism, marriage and burial entries, particularly in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Frequently vestry minutes contain items such as the names of church wardens, of the confirmed, of cess applotters and payers (cess being a local tax levied by the general vestry for the repair of the roads etc.), of the poor, the widowed and the orphaned receiving relief, and of overseers of the poor and of the roads. The local historian and the genealogist will both find much useful material buried in the vestry minutes.

Other types of Church of Ireland non-public records of interest are: confirmation registers; account books recording the names of those who gave money to the church or who were paid for their services and even the names of those who received financial and other assistance from the parish; registers of vestrymen which list for each year those who served on the vestry (though they generally date from 1870). Occasionally there is a census for a parish identifying the members of each family, such as that for Christ Church, Belfast, in 1852.

PRONI's copying programme of Church of Ireland records covers mainly the pre-1871 baptisms and burials, pre-1845 marriages and early vestry minute books for churches in Northern Ireland. However, you will find that many more recent records have also been copied. More recently all pre-1900 records for churches in Counties Cavan, Monaghan and Donegal were filmed. Original records and paper copies can be found under the PRONI reference code CR/1, and the microfilm copies under MIC1 or MIC583. At the beginning of the catalogues of MIC583 and MIC1 there is an alphabetical index to all the records listed. The Guide also notes those records not copied or not deposited but which are available in local custody according to the periodic returns of parish records sent to the Representative Church Body Library.

Methodist Church Records

Methodism grew out of the Established Church. When John Wesley came to Ireland in the mid-18th century, people joined the Wesleyan Methodist Society from all denominations but remained in their own churches. In 1804 the Irish Conference of the Methodist Church stated that no Methodist preacher in Ireland should perform the office of baptism. Methodists were expected to go to the parish church for the administration of baptism, and hence the importance again of the Church of Ireland records in the 18th century. However, in 1816 there was a split in Methodism between the Primitive Wesleyan Methodists who retained their link with the Established Church, and the Wesleyan Methodists who allowed their ministers to administer baptisms. This explains the fact that the earliest baptism registers date from 1816 (those for Donegall Square, Belfast) and also that the Primitive Wesleyans did not have any separate baptism registers until the 1860s, and then only until 1878 when the two branches of Methodism were united.

Another breakaway branch of Methodism to be found in Ireland was the Methodist New Connexion, which wanted to move even further away from the Established Church than the Wesleyan Methodists. Their churches were largely confined to Counties Down and Antrim. For example, Zion at Newtownards, Co. Down, Broomhedge, Co. Antrim, and Priesthill, Co. Down, were such churches. They eventually united with the Irish Methodist Conference in 1905.

The Society of Primitive Methodists, which began in England in 1812 as part of the revivalist movement, was also to be found in Ireland. It began its Irish mission work in 1832, but only ever had a few congregations in the Shankill and Donegall Road areas of Belfast. In 1910 the Irish Methodist Conference took over responsibility for the Irish Primitive Methodist churches. The majority of Methodist baptism registers do not begin until the 1830s and the marriages until 1845. There are few Methodist burial registers because most Methodist churches simply did not have their own burial grounds. However, an important record is a large volume of baptism entries for Methodist churches throughout Ireland which is in among the administrative records of the Methodist Church in Ireland (MIC429/1) and which may have been the product of an attempt to compile a central register of baptisms. Although incomplete, it contains baptisms from 1815 to 1840 and often pre-dates existing individual church baptism registers.

Other classes of records are useful to the genealogist and the local historian. Membership registers or quarterly class rolls, dating mainly from the mid-19th century (a few go back to 1819, such as those for Lurgan), are an important source for researching the growth and the decline of Methodism in an area. Circuit schedule books, dating mainly from the 1870s, give the names of Methodist societies, the number in each, the numbers of new members received, of members removed elsewhere, of emigrations and of deaths, as well as details of Temperance associations, returns of Sunday schools and chapels, and accounts. They are an invaluable source for the history of Methodism.

Many Methodist churches in Northern Ireland and in Counties Cavan, Monaghan and Donegal have had their records copied by PRONI and these are to be found under reference codes MIC1E and CR6. At the beginning of the MICIE catalogue there is an alphabetical index to all circuits and churches mentioned in the catalogue. Records not copied by PRONI will be in local custody or will be held by the Wesley Historical Society [see Appendix 6 for address].

Methodist baptism registers are generally for a circuit; for marriages each individual church usually has its own registers from 1845 onwards. Because the composition of circuits has changed from time to time, it is important to note that the records of any Methodist church may be found in several different circuits.

Presbyterian Church Records

Presbyterianism came to Ulster from Scotland in the 17th century but its freedom was severely curtailed by penal enactments to the extent that it was illegal until 1782 for Presbyterian ministers to perform marriages even of Presbyterians and only from 1845 could they legally marry a Presbyterian and a member of the Church of Ireland. Religious and civil persecution resulting from the Penal Laws meant that many Presbyterian baptisms, marriages and burials are to be found in the registers of the Church of Ireland, albeit sporadic, until well into the 18th century. Burial registers for Presbyterian churches are uncommon as there were few Presbyterian burial grounds. Although Presbyterian registers and those of other denominations were not subject to state control and therefore there was no requirement to place them in the Public Record Office of Ireland for safe-keeping, there are still few registers going back into the 18th century.

A feature of Presbyterianism is the number of places which have more than one Presbyterian church and are referred to as 1st, 2nd and 3rd. Frequent disputes over doctrine or the choice of a minister, or just the need for more accommodation, led to the creation of new congregations, and building of new churches. Many of the churches now known as 1st, 2nd or 3rd began as seceding congregations which broke away from the original Synod of Ulster in 1733. The Seceders took a strong evangelical stand and in particular objected to an Act of Parliament in 1712 which accepted patronage as an accepted method of appointing ministers. However, as the Synod of Ulster and Secession Synod gradually resolved their differences and eventually came to hold the same doctrines, the secession congregations were re-united in 1840 into the Synod of Ulster.

Another complication arises from changes in the designation of churches. For example, a new congregation was formed in Ballymoney in 1834 and was known as 2nd Ballymoney but, when the Seceders joined the Synod of Ulster in 1840, the Seceding congregation was given the name 2nd Ballymoney and this new church (hitherto the 2nd) became 3rd Ballymoney. A History of Presbyterian Congregations in the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, 1610-1982, published by the Presbyterian Historical Society (and now also available on-line on the Presbyterian Historical Society website), is a useful tool when unravelling these problems.

Besides registers, there are other records of interest to the family and local historian. Instead of vestry minutes, Presbyterian churches have session and committee minutes. The former are usually the more interesting as they sometimes record baptisms and marriages, and the names of new communicants, of those who transgressed and those who left the church (whether to another congregation or emigrated and thus required a transfer certificate), as well as subscription lists. There are often separate communicants' registers which sometimes contain details of deaths, emigrations or transfers to other congregations. A common Presbyterian church record is the stipend book recording details of those who paid into the church. Seat lists or pew rent books are also common, listing the names of those who had seats rented in the church. There are also occasionally account books and censuses of congregations.

Presbyterian records copied by PRONI are almost exclusively for the nine counties of Ulster and are available under the PRONI reference codes MICIP and CR3. There are also alphabetical indexes to the churches appearing in the MICIP and CR3 catalogues. Where records have not yet been copied this is indicated in the Guide. Some records are held by the Presbyterian Historical Society including some for churches in the Irish Republic and particularly for churches no longer in existence. The most significant of these for the nine counties of Ulster are noted in the Guide.

Roman Catholic Records

The Penal Laws militated against the erection of chapels and regular recordkeeping, and so Roman Catholic registers are generally later than Protestant registers, mostly dating from the 1820s. They are almost entirely for baptisms and marriages, though death or funeral entries do occur occasionally (these generally record only the name of the deceased and the date of death). Roman Catholic registers themselves are often closely written although from the 1860s proforma registers are more common and are sometimes in Latin. The baptism entries include the names of sponsors and marriage entries, the names of witnesses.

Roman Catholic parishes are often made up of parts of more than one civil parish and so searching under several parishes is necessary to find all the records of the Roman Catholic parish. Cross references appear in the Guide where this is known to occur. Another complication arises from the fact that a Roman Catholic parish can be known by several names. Where known, the historical name is given in brackets in the Guide. However, the name in brackets may also indicate the registers of a particular church within the Roman Catholic parish. Most Roman Catholic parishes have more than one church. Sometimes only one register was kept for the entire parish, but at other times each church had its own registers. The registers themselves do not always make this clear and so it is often difficult to ascertain what is contained in a register.

The National Library of Ireland microfilmed almost all the pre-1880 registers in Ireland, but PRONI has microfilm copies only for parishes in Northern Ireland, for most of those in Counties Donegal, Cavan and Monaghan, and for some in Counties Louth and Leitrim. They are to be found under the PRONI reference code MIC1D. In addition there are some xerox copies under CR2. An alphabetical index to all names referred to in the MIC1D catalogue is to be found at the beginning of the MIC1D catalogue.

Other Protestant Dissenting Records

(a) Congregational Church

Congregationalists came to Ireland in the 17th century but made little impact until the early 19th century. The setting up of the Irish Evangelical Society in 1814 resulted in many churches being built. From this date the earliest records exist, although most date from the 1880s. They are mostly baptism and marriage registers and minute books.

PRONI holds some records of Congregational churches in Dublin and Sligo and has either copies or originals of records of churches at Carrickfergus (which has baptisms from 1819 to the present), Richhill, Straid and Coleraine. All of these will be found under the reference code MIC1G or CR7.

(b) Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church (or Unitarians)

The Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church has its origins as far back as 1725 when a number of congregations refused to subscribe to the Westminster Confession of Faith and formed themselves into a separate Presbytery of Antrim. It retained links with the General Synod of Ulster until the 1820s when the issue of subscription having come to a head, the Non-Subscribers were forced out of the Synod of Ulster and formed the Remonstrant Synod of Ulster. Some of the early Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church records, created before the split, are in fact Presbyterian records: for example, the early records of Scarva Street Presbyterian Church in Banbridge are to be found in Banbridge Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church records. It is advisable to check the history of a congregation to find out if the early records might be elsewhere.

PRONI has copied some Non-Subscribing Presbyterian Church records and some have also been deposited, notably one of the earliest session minute books which is for Templepatrick, 1646-1743. The records can be found under the PRONI reference code MICIB or CR4.

(c) Reformed Presbyterian Church (or Covenanters)

Although the Reformed Presbyterian Church had its origins in the 17th century, when a minority of Presbyterians wished to adhere more strictly to the Covenants of 1638 and 1642, it was not until the mid 18th century that congregations were formed with their own ordained ministers. In 1763, the first Irish Reformed Presbytery was set up; by 1800 it had 28 congregations in counties Antrim, Armagh, Down, Tyrone, Donegal and Monaghan.

However, the earliest records begin mainly in the mid-19th century, apart from some early 19th century session minutes for Cullybackey, Co. Antrim, and Drumboig, Co. Londonderry. They are similar in type to Presbyterian Church records. Some have been copied by PRONI and can be found under the reference codes MIC1C and CR5.

(d) Baptist Churches in Ireland

Baptist beliefs and ministry first emerged in Ireland in the mid 17th century with early records showing churches established in the cities of Cork (1640) Dublin (1642) and Waterford (1650). These early churches did not have dedicated meeting houses and it was not until 1653 that the first building for a Baptist meeting house in Ireland was erected in Swift's Alley, Dublin.

The Irish Baptist Association was founded in 1725 and replaced by the Baptist Union of Ireland in 1895, which later became the Association of Baptist Churches in Ireland in 2000. This is a voluntary partnership which currently comprises 118 autonomous churches. The Association of Baptist Churches publishes an Annual Report and Accounts which contains useful information on all its churches including their work at home and abroad.

Members consist of those who have been baptised as believers and whose lives are characterised by godliness and obedience to the scriptures. A list of members is kept by each church. Minute books are useful sources of information and record details of those who have been received into membership and often the date of their deaths. Most Baptist churches do not have their own burial ground but some do (for example Tandragee, Co. Armagh and Lisnagleer, Co. Tyrone). The earliest Baptist church in Northern Ireland was founded in Coleraine, Co. Londonderry (1795) and it is still in existence. PRONI holds a microfilm copy of the church's membership book (MIC1H/1/1).

The records of 12 Baptist churches were transferred to PRONI from the Baptist Centre, Moira, Co Down: Tandragee, Co Armagh; Clough, Conlig, Holywood and Killyleagh, Co Down; Tobermore (also spelled Tubbermore) Co Londonderry; Dungannon, Co Tyrone; Cork city; Bedford Road, Limerick city; Swift's Alley, Dublin; Waterford city; and Athlone, Co. Westmeath. The most historically important records are five volumes relating to Swift's Alley, Dublin, most notably a combined Poor Book and Account Book which includes a list of members, amounts collected and paid to the poor and details of legacies and subscriptions from the members for the building of the first Baptist meeting house.

(e) The Religious Society of Friends (or Quakers)

The Religious Society of Friends began in Ulster in the mid-17th century, settling mainly around Lisburn, Co. Antrim, and Lurgan, Co. Armagh. From the beginning there was a strong emphasis on recordkeeping. George Fox, the founder of the Society, advised every meeting to keep a record of its business and also to keep registers of births, marriages and burials. The records are very complete and for most monthly meetings they exist almost continuously from the date of origin.

Apart from registers of births [not baptisms, as baptism was not practised by the Society of Friends], marriages and burials, the Society of Friends also maintained a number of other unique types of records. Records of sufferings detail the penalties endured for the religious beliefs (for example, they often suffered for non-payment of tithes). There are copies of removal certificates, given when members transferred to other societies, and testimonies of disunity from those who committed offences contrary to church rules (for example, marrying outside the Society, failure to pay debts or drinking to excess). Minutes record in great detail the work, organisation and oversight of meetings, including details about sufferings and records of births, marriages and deaths (sometimes arranged by family name). Wills and inventories throw a great deal of light on social conditions and on rural and domestic life because they list household and farm equipment.

PRONI has copied all the records at the Lisburn Meeting House which include not only those of Lisburn, but of Lurgan, Ballyhagen and Richhill in Co.

Armagh, Grange near Charlemont, Co. Tyrone, Antrim, and Cootehill, Co. Monaghan. They are to be found under the reference code MIC16.

In the last century indexes were made of the early registers of monthly meetings and these contain abstracts of all births, marriages and deaths up to 1859. Thereafter, new abstract registers were kept. Another valuable search aid is a list [Jones Index] of every surname occurring in the registers of the Society of Friends in Ireland and showing the monthly meeting in which each name appears. All of these are available at the Dublin Friends' Historical Library.

(f) The Moravian Church

The Moravian Church was founded in the 18th century in what is now the Czech Republic. John Cennick introduced Moravian work into Ireland, arriving in Dublin in 1746 and founding the first Moravian Church there. Within two years there were societies in counties Antrim, Down, Armagh, Londonderry, Cavan and Monaghan. From these sprang the congregations making up the Moravian Church in Ireland – Ballinderry, Kilwarlin, Gracehill, Gracefield, Belfast (University Road and Cliftonville) and Dublin.

Like the Religious Society of Friends, the Moravians were excellent record-keepers, as illustrated by the fact that some series of records for Dublin and for Gracehill are virtually continuous from their date of origin in the mid-18th century. Apart from baptism, marriage and burial registers, the Moravian Church also maintains very detailed membership registers recording for each member date of birth, previous denomination (if appropriate), when deceased or left and the reason for leaving. Ministers' diaries contain births, marriages and deaths (often with biographical details), the names of those who joined the church and those who left, and lists of members.

PRONI has copied all the records held at Gracehill Moravian Church which comprise not only of those for Gracehill but also for other churches including the Dublin church. Kilwarlin and Ballinderry churches have their own records, and these too have been copied by PRONI. All these records can be found under the PRONI reference code MIC1F or CR9.
